Right at the end of the room were two spare bunks, one on top of the other. Next to them stood a huge black guy, wearing a tight vest and sweat pants. He held a weight in his arm and curled his bicep over and over as I walked to the beds. I looked at him out of the corner of my eye and saw that his big, brown eyes watched me like a hawk as I moved. He had short dreadlocks and a coarse, stubbly face.

I casually placed my bag onto the top bunk, right next to him. He turned and looked straight at me.

'Oh no you didn't!' he said and put his weight down. 'Did you just try to claim my bunk?'

I froze, terrified.

'No, I mean, yeah, I mean, I didn't know it was yours,' I stammered, trying to control my anxiety.

'The only way you're gettin' in that bunk, is by sharin' it with me.'

Cute, shy-guy John never thought he'd end up in prison. When his life takes a turn for the worst and it's where he ends up, he's terrified. Pretty white boys don't have a great time behind bars.
